Economy tops list of issues voters want candidates to discuss; Iraq and health care follow

Throughout 2007, health care had been the top domestic issue, following only Iraq as the issue that voters wanted to hear the presidential candidates discuss. In February 2008, health care dropped to third place, as the economy took the lead among issues that voters wanted to hear about. In April, this ranking remains, with 49 percent of registered voters saying they want to hear candidates talk about the economy, followed by 42 percent who mention Iraq, and 23 percent who mention health care. What used to be the fourth-ranked issue, immigration (mentioned by 14 percent of voters in February), drops to 6 percent in April, and gas prices and energy issues are now mentioned by 10 percent (up from 2 percent in February). Health care now ranks third among Republicans, Democrats, and independents alike, though a larger share of Democrats (29 percent) name it as a top issue than Republicans (19 percent) and independents (18 percent).

Thinking about the campaign for the presidential election in 2008, what two issues would you most like to hear the presidential candidates talk about? (open-ended, among registered voters)

After falling in our last two tracking polls, the share of voters naming Iraq as a top issue for candidates to discuss increased ten percentage points from February to April, perhaps as a result of increased media attention on the war during this period. Focus on the economy also remains high, and in April, nearly half (49 percent) of voters name the economy as a top issue for candidates to discuss. With the focus on both of these issues, the share of voters naming health care declined somewhat, from 28 percent in February to 23 percent in April. While the shares of Republican and independent voters naming health care decreased between October 2007 and February 2008, these shares held fairly steady between February and April 2008 at around one in five each. The decrease in the share of voters naming health care appears to be driven by Democratic voters, 40 percent of whom named health care in February, decreasing to 29 percent in April.
Economy, Iraq, and health care are also the top voting issues...

When voters are asked instead about the issues that will affect their vote for president in 2008, the top three issues are the same as those that voters want to hear candidates discuss – the economy (48 percent), followed by Iraq (30 percent) and health care (20 percent). Frustration with the government is mentioned by about one in seven (14 percent) registered voters as an important issue in their choice for president. Health care ranks third as a voting issue for Democratic and independent voters, and fourth for Republican voters.

Thinking ahead to the November 2008 presidential election, what is the single most important issue in your choice for president? Is there one other issue that’s nearly as important? (open-ended, among registered voters)

Voters more interested in reducing costs; change driven by independent voters

When asked specifically about health care issues, four in ten voters (41 percent) say they want to hear about reducing the costs of health care and insurance. About three in ten (30 percent) say they want to hear candidates talk about expanding coverage, followed by improving quality of care (15 percent) and reducing spending on government programs (9 percent). There are differences across political parties, with Republican voters (43 percent) and independent voters (46 percent) more likely to say they want to hear about reducing costs, and Democratic voters more likely to say they want to hear about expanding coverage (45 percent).

Looking at independent registered voters’ responses to this question over time, there was a big shift between February and April 2008, with a much larger share of this group in April choosing reducing costs, and a smaller share interested in hearing candidates talk about expanding coverage. This may be due, at least in part, to the increasing focus on the economy overall as an issue over the last several months.
Preferences for health reform efforts

Given the discussion about changes to our health care system throughout the presidential primaries, it is interesting to examine the public’s preferences. In a question about improving the U.S. health care system, a slim majority of voters (54 percent) say the main goal of reform efforts should focus on all Americans having health coverage. About four in ten (42 percent) say efforts should focus on making insurance more available and affordable in the private marketplace, even if some people remain uninsured. As in the question about health care priorities, there are clear partisan preferences, with fully seven in ten Democratic voters (70 percent) saying reform efforts should focus on expanding coverage, and six in ten Republican voters (61 percent) saying efforts should focus on making health insurance more available and affordable in the private marketplace. Independent voters are more evenly split between the two options, with about half (50 percent) saying improvements to the health care system should focus on covering everyone, and the other half (48 percent) saying efforts should focus on making insurance available and affordable, even if everyone doesn’t get covered.

Preferences for the direction of reform in the U.S. health care system

In a question that asked about the direction the U.S. health care system should take, voters are evenly split between building on the current employer-based coverage system, where people with low incomes are eligible for coverage through government-funded programs (43 percent), and moving towards a system in which health insurance would be largely purchased by individuals, with tax incentives to help groups with more modest incomes (44 percent). Differences by political party identification are more modest on this question, though Democratic voters are somewhat more likely to favor building on the current system, while Republican and independent voters are somewhat more likely to favor moving toward a system where most insurance is purchased by individuals.

Which of the following best describes the direction you would like to see the country take when it comes to health care?

(among registered voters in April 2008)

- Building on the current system, where most people get their insurance through their employers and many of those with low incomes have their health care paid for by the government through public programs
- Moving toward a system in which most individuals would buy their own insurance but people with more modest incomes would receive a government tax credit to help them with the cost of the plan
- Don’t know/Refused

Methodology

This Kaiser Health Tracking Poll: Election 2008, the seventh in a series, was designed and analyzed by public opinion researchers at the Kaiser Family Foundation led by Mollyann Brodie, Ph.D., including Elizabeth Hamel and Carolina Gutiérrez. A nationally representative random sample of 1,759 registered voters was interviewed by telephone between April 3 and April 13, 2008. The margin of sampling error for the survey is plus or minus 3 percentage points; for results based on subgroups, the sampling error is higher.

February trends are from the sixth survey in the Kaiser Health Tracking Poll: Election 2008 series, and are based on a nationally representative random sample of 1,770 registered voters interviewed February 7-16, 2008 (margin of sampling error plus or minus 3 percentage points).

December trends are from the fifth survey in the Kaiser Health Tracking Poll: Election 2008 series, and are based on a nationally representative random sample of 1,063 registered voters interviewed November 28-December 9, 2007 (margin of sampling error plus or minus 4 percentage points).

October trends are from the fourth survey in the Kaiser Health Tracking Poll: Election 2008 series, and are based on a nationally representative random sample of 1,058 registered voters interviewed October 1-10, 2007 (margin of sampling error plus or minus 3 percentage points).

August trends are from the third survey in the Kaiser Health Tracking Poll: Election 2008 series, and are based on a nationally representative random sample of 1,303 registered voters interviewed August 2-8, 2007 (margin of sampling error plus or minus 3 percentage points).

June trends are from the second survey in the Kaiser Health Tracking Poll: Election 2008 series, and are based on a nationally representative random sample of 1,050 registered voters interviewed May 31-June 5, 2007 (margin of sampling error plus or minus 4 percentage points).

March trends are from the first survey in the Kaiser Health Tracking Poll: Election 2008 series, and are based on a nationally representative random sample of 1,013 registered voters interviewed March 8-13, 2007 (margin of sampling error plus or minus 3 percentage points).

1 December data for question 1b comes from a parallel survey of a nationally representative random sample of 1,772 registered voters interviewed by telephone between November 28 and December 10, 2007, which has a margin of sampling error of plus or minus 3 percentage points. This question was asked on a separate survey because of the desire to track opinions about the issues people most want to hear candidates discuss and the most important issue in their choice for president. In order to avoid biasing answers to these questions by asking them of the same group, and to preserve a large enough sample for subgroup analysis, the questions were asked of separate samples on separate surveys.
