Survey of Hurricane Katrina Evacuees

September 2005

Overall Project Description

The Washington Post/Kaiser Family Foundation/Harvard School of Public Health Survey Project is a three-way partnership and an experiment in combining survey research and reporting to better inform the public. The Post, Kaiser, and Harvard jointly design and analyze surveys examining public knowledge, perceptions, and misperceptions on major issues. The Post then reports the results as well as facts to dispel myths and misperceptions. Our hope is that this project contributes to a better understanding of public knowledge on major issues facing the country as well as more effective efforts by the media to educate, inform, and engage citizens in national debates.

To give voice to people whose lives have been devastated by Hurricane Katrina and the ensuing floods, the Survey of Hurricane Katrina Evacuees took place Sept. 10-12, 2005 among 680 randomly selected adult evacuees residing in Houston shelters. Interviews were conducted face-to-face. The margin of error for overall results is plus or minus 4 percentage points. Fieldwork was conducted by ICR/International Communications Research of Media , PA.

Representatives of The Washington Post, The Henry J. Kaiser Family Foundation, and Harvard School of Public Health worked together to develop the survey questionnaire and analyze the results. Each organization bears the sole responsibility for the work that appears under its name. The project team included Richard Morin, The Washington Post director of polling and Claudia Deane, assistant director of polling; Drew E. Altman, president of the Kaiser Family Foundation, Mollyann Brodie, vice president and director of public opinion and media research, and Erin Weltzien, research associate; and Robert J. Blendon, professor of health policy and political analysis at the Harvard School of Public Health and the John F. Kennedy School of Government, and John M. Benson, managing director of the Harvard Opinion Research Program in the Harvard School of Public Health.

Please note: (1) Table percentages may not add to 100% due to rounding. (2) Values less than 0.5% are indicated by an asterisk (*). (3) "Vol." indicates that a response was volunteered by the respondent and not an explicitly offered choice.

Detailed Methodology

Who was interviewed: The survey was conducted with 680 respondents aged 18 or older who were evacuated to Houston from the Gulf Coast due to Hurricane Katrina. This included: 439 respondents in the Houston Reliant Park Complex (which included the Reliant Astrodome and the Reliant Center); 152 in the George R. Brown Convention Center; and 12 whose location was not recorded.

The sample also included 77 respondents from five of the fourteen smaller Red Cross shelters in the greater Houston area. Interviewers were unable to visit the remaining shelters due to privacy concerns, unstable conditions, or inability to reach the center or receive clearance in a timely manner. We have no reason to believe residents of the shelters we could not access are significantly different from those living in the shelters we were able to access, but we cannot rule out this possibility.

Interviews were distributed across shelters in proportion to best estimates of the actual shelter populations on the dates of interviewing.

Overall, 98 percent of those interviewed were from the greater New Orleans area.

Red Cross participation: The Red Cross gave The Post/Kaiser/Harvard team permission to interview at the various centers, but was not a co-sponsor of the survey and bears no responsibility for results presented here. Interviewers made clear to each respondent that their ability to receive Red Cross aid was in no way related to their participation in the survey. In addition, the interviewing team received permission from the City of Houston and Reliant Park complex administrators to enter shelters under their control.

The interviewers: Interviews were conducted by 28 professional, Houston-based interviewers who were supervised by Erin Weltzien of the Kaiser Family Foundation and Lori Robbins of ICR with input from Washington Post staff in Houston. ICR also oversaw all other aspects of the fieldwork under the direction of Vice President Melissa Herrmann and Account Manager Jennifer Schmidt.

Supervisors divided each shelter location into separate areas which were then assigned to an individual interviewer. In the three main shelter complexes (the Astrodome, Reliant Center, and Convention Center) those areas were monitored by an interviewer from 9:00 am to 8:00 pm. At the five smaller shelters, interviewers visited at various times throughout the day to conduct interviews.

On the second day of interviewing in the Reliant Park Complex, interviewers were accompanied by a Red Cross volunteer. These volunteers did not conduct, nor interfere with, interviews in any way. All interviews were conducted in the most private circumstances available, given the circumstances in the shelters.

The survey instrument: The survey instrument and survey design were reviewed by the Human Subjects Committee at the Harvard School of Public Health.

Surveys were conducted using paper questionnaires, and the data was processed by ICR. Each survey lasted approximately 20 to 25 minutes.

Respondents were told that all survey results would be reported in the aggregate. No names or other personal identifiers were collected.

How individual respondents were selected: Interviewers were instructed to use two random selection procedures depending upon the mobility of the evacuees in their assigned area.

For areas where the evacuees either had limited mobility or were non-mobile -- --for example, cot areas occupied largely by elderly or infirm evacuees, or TV lounge areas -- interviewers moved through the respondent population. Specifically, interviewers were given a random number and instructed to count off this number of people before beginning the first/next interview. After an interview was completed (or a refusal obtained), interviewers would again count off using the random interval before selecting the next respondent.

For areas where evacuees were mobile -- for example hallways and evacuee service areas -- interviewers stayed in one particular spot throughout the interviewing period. They then counted people who passed their defined location and chose the (randomly generated)  $n^{\text{th}}$  person to interview. This selection criteria was duplicated at the conclusion of each contact attempt, whether it was a completed interview or a refusal.

In both cases, interviewers excluded children from the counting cycle.

Response rates: Nine in ten evacuees approached about the survey agreed to participate.

Who wasn't included: The survey was intended to cover that population that was hardest hit by the hurricane: those that did not make it out of the city in time, that had to rely on government help to evacuate, and that did not have access to immediate shelter on their own. Clearly there are a large number of evacuees now living with friends or family, in temporary paid housing, in hotels, or in other shelters outside Houston. The opinion of these evacuees -- generally a more well-off population-- are obviously not included in this survey.
