Survey of South Africans at Ten Years of Democracy

March 2004

Methodology

The Washington Post/Kaiser Family Foundation/Harvard University Survey Project is a three-way partnership and an experiment in combining survey research and reporting to better inform the public. The Post, Kaiser, and Harvard jointly design and analyze surveys examining public knowledge, perceptions, and misperceptions on major issues. The Post then reports the results as well as facts to dispel myths and misperceptions.

The current Survey of South Africans at Ten Years of Democracy is a nationally representative survey of South African citizens ages 18 years and older. Face-to-face interviews were conducted in nine of South Africa's eleven official languages between September 29 and November 7, 2003. The survey sample was designed as a probability based, nationally representative sample, stratified by province, race, age, and urban/rural divisions using data from the 2001 Census of South Africa. Sampling was done in three stages: the first stage was a random selection of enumeration areas (EAs) in the country; the second stage was a random selection of dwelling units/stands within the EA; and the third stage was a random selection of an eligible respondent within the dwelling. The final sample included 2,961 South Africans, including 1,715 Black South Africans, 612 Whites, 364 Coloureds, and 265 Indians (see note†). All results have been weighted to be representative of the South African population by province, geographic area type, age, race, and gender.

The margin of sampling error for total respondents is +/- 3 percentage points. For Black respondents it is +/-4 percentage points, for Whites it is +/-9 percentage points, for Coloureds it is +/-9 percentage points, and for Indians it is +/-8 percentage points. For responses based on subgroups, the margin of sampling error is higher. Sampling error is only one of many potential sources of error in this or any other public opinion poll.

Representatives of The Washington Post, The Henry J. Kaiser Family Foundation, and Harvard University worked together to develop the survey questionnaire and analyze the results. Each organization bears the sole responsibility for the work that appears under its name. The project team included Richard Morin, The Washington Post director of polling; Drew E. Altman, president of the Kaiser Family Foundation, Mollyann Brodie, vice president and director of public opinion and media research, and Elizabeth Hamel, senior research associate; and Robert J. Blendon, professor of health policy and political analysis at the John F. Kennedy School of Government and the Harvard School of Public Health, and John M. Benson, managing director of the Harvard Opinion Research Program in the Harvard School of Public Health. Fieldwork for this survey was conducted by Development Research Africa (DRA) of Durban, South Africa. Dr. David Stoker of Statistics South Africa served as a consultant on this project in drawing the sample and weighting the data.

Values less than 0.5% are indicated by an asterisk (*). "Vol." indicates that a response was volunteered by respondent, not an explicitly offered choice.

† A note on the racial categories used in this document: Under the apartheid government, all South Africans were classified according to one of four racial categories – Black, White, Coloured, or Indian. While these categories were used by the apartheid government to keep the races separate, today they are used to track the progress of groups who were previously disadvantaged by apartheid.

- 1.1 Let's begin by talking about the direction of the country. Would you say that the country is going in the right direction or going in the wrong direction?
