The Washington Post/Kaiser Family Foundation/Harvard University

Survey of Teens in the Greater Washington, D.C. Area

October 2005

Methodology

The Washington Post/Kaiser Family Foundation/Harvard University Survey Project is a three-way partnership and an experiment in combining survey research and reporting to better inform the public. The Post, Kaiser, and Harvard jointly design and analyze surveys examining public knowledge, perceptions, and misperceptions on major issues. The Post then reports the results as well as facts to dispel myths and misperceptions. Our hope is that this project contributes to a better understanding of public knowledge on major issues facing the country as well as more effective efforts by the media to educate, inform, and engage citizens in national debates.

Representatives of The Washington Post, The Henry J. Kaiser Family Foundation, and Harvard University worked together to develop survey questionnaires and analyze results. Each organization bears the sole responsibility for the work that appears under its name. The project team included Richard Morin, The Washington Post director of polling, and Claudia Deane, assistant director of polling; Drew E. Altman, president of the Kaiser Family Foundation, Mollyann Brodie, vice president and director of public opinion and media research, and Liz Hamel, associate director; and Robert J. Blendon, professor of health policy and political analysis at the John F. Kennedy School of Government and the Harvard School of Public Health, and John M. Benson, managing director of the Harvard Opinion Research Program in the Harvard School of Public Health.

The Survey of Teens in the Greater Washington, D.C. Area was conducted among 800 pairs of parents and teenagers in the Washington, D.C. region, including the District of Columbia, Maryland, and Virginia. Not all questions were asked of parents. Teenagers were defined as those between 14 and 18 years of age. Interviews were conducted by telephone between April 26 and May 29, 2005 by ICR/International Communications Research of Media, Pennsylvania. Parental permission was granted before each teen interview. Both teen and parent samples were weighted using Census data to best reflect parent and teen populations in the region. The margin of sampling error for teen and parent samples is plus or minus four percentage points; for results based on subsets of respondents the margin of sampling error is higher.

The survey also includes additional questions asked of a national sample of 570 teenagers between 14 and 18 years of age. Interviews were conducted by telephone from August 3 to August 8, 2005 by ICR/International Communications Research. The margin of sampling error for this national sample is plus or minus four percentage points.

Please note: (1) Table percentages may not add to 100% due to rounding. (2) Values less than 0.5% are indicated by an asterisk (*). (3) "Vol." indicates that a response was volunteered by the respondent and not an explicitly offered choice. (4) Sampling error is only one of many potential sources of error in this or any other public opinion poll.
