2 MR. SURO: Good morning, and welcome.

3 My name is Roberto Suro. I'm the 4 director of the Pew Hispanic Center. And with 5 MollyAnn Brodie, the vice president of the Kaiser
6 Family Foundation, we will be presenting a packet 7 of research materials to you this morning.

8 This is the third in a series of national 9 surveys of the Latino population that the Pew 10 Hispanic Center had conducted in collaboration with 11 the Kaiser Family Foundation.

12 And for those of you who know that body 13 of work, it's -- we attempt to go somewhat deeper 14 than the standard newspaper polls that sort of 15 measure things from one poll to another.

16 And our goal here really is to deepen an 17 understanding of the Latino population to explore 18 its underlying dynamics and to give some 19 perspective on the news of the day.

20 Latino voters obviously are of great 21 interest right now because it's a very close 22 presidential election. And with the conventions

2

1 ahead, it is important to get a reading on this 2 segment of the electorate.

3 Because, as I said, our interest goes
4 beyond the political moment, goes beyond this 5 election to explore a new and growing force on the 6 political scene, its makeup, its character and its 7 impact, all of which are evolving and changing from 8 one election cycle to another.

9 The Pew Hispanic Center and the Kaiser
10 Family Foundation have assembled a package of 11 material that, first of all, answers the obvious 12 question at the moment, which is the horse race and 13 where the election stands between President Bush
14 and Senator Kerry, but also explores the longer 15 term questions of the composition and character of 16 the Latino electorate and the political views of 17 the Latino population as a whole.

18 First, let me just go over the materials
19 that you have in your packets.

20 They are also available on the Pew
21 Hispanic Center and Kaiser Family websites. And as 22 of now, they should be up. And the transcript of 3

1 the press conference will also be available on the 2 Pew Hispanic Center website later today.

3 You have a fact sheet that goes over some 4 demographic characteristics of the Latino 5 electorate. There are two surveys that we are 6 reporting on today.

7 The main survey was taken from late April 8 to early June with a very large sample of the 9 entire Latino population and explores a wide range 10 of political views and political behaviors.

11 The second survey is much narrower. It's 12 focused only on the presidential horse race and was 13 conducted from the beginning of last week through 14 the beginning of this week.

15 I'm just -- we are going to go over all 16 of this fairly quickly, and hopefully there will 17 been plenty of time for questions afterwards.

18 Let me just start with the fact sheet
19 which makes really just a few basic observations 20 that are important, if you wouldn't mind, as we try

21 to understand the Latino electorate.

22 The first is there is a very substantial

1 difference between the total Latino population and 2 the electorate. And the most significant 3 difference is in size.

4 The Latino electorate -- the Latino
5 population as a whole includes a very large share 6 of immigrant noncitizens.

7 And the easiest way to picture the 8 difference was that in 2000, the Latino and 9 African-American populations were roughly of the 10 same size. But on election day, there were about 11 twice as many African-Americans at the polls as 12 there were Latinos.

13 And this chiefly a result of the fact 14 that you have so many noncitizen adults in the 15 Latino population.

16 Nonetheless, the Hispanic population has 17 been growing. And based on the available data, the 18 eligible electorate will have increased by about by 19 about 20 percent between 2000 and 2004.

20 However, you know, the second major point 21 in this fact sheet is important to keep in mind.

22 The largest component of growth is of

1 young people, the native-born Latinos, who turn 18.
2 This is a population, regardless of ethnicity, that 3 is notoriously difficult to mobilize for political 4 action.

5 They don't register, and they don't vote
6 in the same proportions as adults. And as a 7 result, that 20 percent increase in eligible voters 8 is not likely to produce a 20 percent increase in 9 actual voters because so much of the increase, as I
10 said, is among young people who, as I say, don't 11 vote as often as their elders.

12 And finally, there is a section on 13 Hispanic Electoral College which makes a couple of 14 the basic fact assertions.

15 About 60 percent of the Latino eligible 16 voters are located in California, New York, and 17 Texas, three states that are currently not assumed 18 to be contested. They are certainly not among the 19 battleground states.

20 There is some detail on the four states 21 that are in the standard of contested states at 22 this point, Florida, New Mexico, Nevada, and

1 Arizona, which all have very different
2 characteristics in terms of their Latino
3 populations.

4 Now, onto the horse race poll. This 5 survey was conducted between July 12 to 20th of 788
6 registered voters in a nationally representative 7 sample contacted through a random dialing sampling 8 technique.

9 In a two-way race, that survey shows
10 President Bush at 32 percent favored by Latino 11 voters compared to Kerry at 62 percent.

12 In a three-way race with the Nader ticket 13 in the mix, it's 31 percent Bush, 59 percent Kerry, 14 and 3 percent Nader.

15 It's interesting when you look at the 16 two-way numbers, the results are virtually the same 17 as they were on Election Day 2000 according to the 18 network exit polls where Gore got 62 percent and 19 Bush got 35 percent.

20 Interestingly, the general population
21 polls are now almost the same as what the exit 22 polls showed in 2000 with a country that is about

1 evenly divided with perhaps -- you know, given from

2 one poll to another, sometimes Kerry has a slight 3 lead.

09:39:40 4 If you look back at the way Latino voters 5 have approached the Bush presidency and sort of the 6 history of polls over the last three and a half 7 years, it is clear that Bush gained with the 8 Latinos, as he did with the rest of the public, 9 after 9-11 and through the spring of 2003 with the 10 combat phase of the war in Iraq.

09:40:0111 And then his approval ratings and his 12 general popularity began to slide, except for a 13 bump last winter at the time of Saddam Hussein's 14 capture.

09:40:1315 Now, with a full-fledged campaign 16 underway, it looks pretty much like it's back to 17 where it all started. Partisan loyalties have 18 reasserted themselves. Bases are largely intact, 19 and that is where the race stands going into what 20 is now I guess the penultimate phase, the 21 convention phase of the campaign.

09:40:3222 For Bush, there are some signs -- not

8

1 huge ones, but there are signals of weakness in his 2 base.

09:40:39 3 More Bush voters said they would still

4 consider voting for Kerry than vice versa. There 5 is some points in the larger poll that we touched 6 on that also indicate a feeling of weakness in the 7 Republican base.

09:40:53 8 But on overall, Bush seems to have about 9 the same standing he did on Election Day 2000.

09:40:5810 On the other hand, Bush clearly has one 11 very strong appeal in this horse race poll.
12 Leadership ability is noted very strongly as his 13 principal strength. Kerry's positives are much 14 more diffuse.

09:41:1315 A much clearer picture of partisan
16 differences emerges from the main survey, and I 17 would ask you now to turn attention to that.

09:41:2118 This survey involved a sample of 2,288
19 Latinos nationwide of whom 1,166 are registered 20 voters.

09:41:3421 It was conducted between April 21 and 22 June 9.

09:41:39 1 The size of the sample allows some very 2 interesting comparisons, both between the 3 electorate and the total population between those 4 who are citizens and those who are not.

09:41:51 5 And also some very -- it is a substantial

9 to follow along with me in the chartpack, which is 10 this document. If you will go to the back of it, 11 you will see the charts on the screen overhead, or 12 you can follow on the screen ahead.

09:43:1413 And I'll go through the first section of 14 that.

09:43:1915 In this slide, what you see is the 16 Democrats have a 2-to-1 advantage in party
17 identification -- that was a poll from among Latino 18 registered voters -- and that has not changed over 19 time.

09:43:3420 We have -- tracking back to 1999, there 21 is virtually no difference in the basic 22 configuration of partisan loyalties among Latino

11

1 registered voters.

09:43:45 2 In this slide, you can see some of the 3 important differences by country of origin.

09:43:51 4 Most significantly, the Cubans are the 5 one major national group in which a very 6 substantial portion are identified as Republicans.

09:44:00 7 Puerto Ricans tend to be heavily
8 Democratic. And you can see among the Mexicans, 9 you have got that basic 2-to-1 split, which really 10 drives the Latino electorate given the size of the 11 Mexican origin population.

09:44:1812 In terms of the demography of partisan 13 loyalties among Latinos, you can see that basically 14 Republicans are more affluent, and there are larger 15 numbers of Republicans who are foreign born, that 16 is people who came here from another country and 17 naturalized -- acquired citizenship through 18 naturalization.

09:44:4319 Among Independents, you can see there is 20 an interesting large number of native born.

09:44:4921 In this slide, you can basically see that 22 there is really not a lot of difference either in

1 religion or in language by partisan loyalties.

09:45:00 2 Republicans are not significantly more
3 Protestant or more born-again than Latino 4 Democrats. The distribution is pretty well even 5 through them.

09:45:12 6 And again, on language, despite the fact 7 that is there a greater number of Republicans who 8 are foreign born, the language differences are not 9 really statistically significant.

09:45:2510 In terms of the difference -- there are 11 various ways to gauge the importance of ethnic 12 identity.

09:45:3113 And one that we have used in a number of 14 surveys over the years is perception of 15 discrimination, both whether respondents feel that 16 discrimination is a major problem to Latinos 17 impeding their progress in the United States and 18 whether they personally have experienced 19 discrimination, either directly or through a family 20 member.

09:45:5121 There is an interesting and significant 22 difference between Latino Democrats and Latino

1 Republicans on this score. And the perception and 2 experience of discrimination is much stronger among 3 Democrats than it is among Republicans. And,
4 interestingly, stronger still among independents.

09:46:12 5 And this question attempted to establish 6 the level of interest in news of the campaign, and 7 basically it mirrors what you see in the general 8 population in terms of who is tuned in and how many 9 are not.

10 In terms of the issues the Latinos pick 11 as most significant in determining their vote for 12 president -- excuse me -- there are no surprises at 13 the top of the chart. There is something of a 14 surprise at the bottom.

15 Education has consistently been ranked as 16 the number one concern for Latino voters and for 17 the Latino population in general.

18 It, I believe, mirrors the fact that 19 you -- this is a population that has a much higher 20 number of families with children than you see in 21 the general population.

22 It's a population that is still on sort

14

1 of an aspirational track with many people seeing 2 education as an important avenue of advancement 3 across generations.

4 The economy, in jobs, health care, and 5 the war against terrorism are all obviously issues 6 and concerns for the general public as well.

7 The surprise at the bottom -- perhaps a 8 surprise -- is that immigration ranks last among 9 issues that Latinos pick as one that will decide 10 their vote.

11 It's cited as extremely important by half
12 as many Latino registered voters as education.

13 Interestingly, on this point, there is 14 not a very large difference across the board among 15 Latinos in terms of their ranking of immigration.

16 I think that this signals that among the 17 registered voters, there is not the perception of a 18 crisis in the immigration system.

21 will see that about a fifth of Latinos who identify 22 as Republicans express negative views towards the

1 President's conduct of the war, and this is 2 consistent over a series of questions.

3 Also, you can see that the negative view 4 carries among Independents. And, again, this is 5 fairly consistent on a variety of questions about 6 the war.

7 Here, a general approval question on 8 handling of the war and a question about whether 9 the president has a clear plan to bring the war to 10 a successful conclusion, and the results are 11 similar.

12 Again, we see that is there a chunk of 13 the Republican base that is concerned, at least 14 about the President's conduct of the war. And you 15 can see it among independents, there is a majority 16 that is -- expresses concerns.

17 You can see that for about four in ten 18 voters, this is a decisive issue. Although a 19 majority said that if a candidate agreed with them 20 on other issues, they can still vote for them, even 21 if they found that they were -- did not share the 22 same views on the war.

1 The next series of slides look at health
2 care issues. Here you can see the ranking of 3 health care issues that Latinos consider most 4 important.

5 I'm going to move on to the next slide 6 which I consider some strong finding on the 7 government policy towards health care coverage.

8 Very large majorities of Latinos, 9 regardless of party identification, favor having 10 the government provide insurance to all Americans, 11 and a significant majority are willing to pay for 12 it, one way or the other.

13 And given the sizes of the majorities and 14 the fact that there is no partisan split on this, 15 it seems to be a very strong statement coming out 16 of this survey.

17 The next series of slides are about 18 immigration. Here you can see on the left-hand 19 part, about 60 percent of the Latino registered 20 voters believe that illegal or undocumented 21 immigrants help the economy, and 31 percent believe 22 that they hurt it.

1 There is no change in that question among 2 the responses to that question among Latino 3 registered voters since we asked it in 2002. The 4 results were basically identical.

5 There is a significant minority of 6 Latinos who are uncomfortable with the size in 7 flows of immigration.

8 And in the question on -- yes. On the 9 right-hand side, the right-hand side question is

10 about the size of the flow and whether the number 11 of immigrants coming through Latin America should 12 be increased, should remain the same, or should be 13 reduced.

14 The fact that 46 percent say that there
15 should be no change maybe helps explain the ranking 16 of immigration as an issue that is not an enormous 17 priority in that you have almost half of Latino 18 voters who say, Leave the situation as it is.

19 I'm not sure.

20 This slide contrasts two proposals for 21 dealing with the current population of unauthorized 22 migrants.

1 And very clearly, the Democratic plan,

2 which offers legal status to people who are here 3 without authorization, is favored by much larger 4 numbers of Latinos than put forward by President
5 Bush, which involves giving people who are here 6 temporary worker visas with the understanding that 7 they will eventually return to their countries of 8 origin.

9 The legalization plan was recently
10 embraced by Senator Kerry quite visibly. He now 11 has in one of his television ads in Spanish a 12 promise that in the first hundred days of his 13 presidency, he would adopt a plan similar to the 14 one that is described in this question.

15 In looking toward the future of 16 immigration flows in the United States and how to 17 deal with the second part of the immigration reform 18 question, after you take care of the population 19 that is already here, what do you do next in order 20 to ensure that future flows come into the country 21 through some sort of legal system; very sizable 22 majorities of Latinos of all parties, really no

1 differentiation by partisan identification, favor 2 legal avenues rather -- avenues that lead to 3 permanent residency and eventual citizenship rather 4 than a temporary worker program that allows you to 5 stay here for a number of years and then return 6 home.

7 On the Bush tax cuts, attitudes seem to 8 reflect both incomes and partisan loyalties,
9 although, Bush does not have a hugely strong 10 showing in his base.

11 44 percent of Latino Republicans say the 12 tax cuts were good for the economy, but a majority 13 don't have that view, again, in his base.

14 The Democratic views, as I said, seem to 15 mirror both partisan loyalties and incomes.

16 On abortion, the views of the Latino 17 registered voters are very close to what you see in 18 national polls, where something over 50 percent in 19 the national polls, 54 percent over the last 20 several years favor the view that abortion should 21 be legal.

22 And, in this case, those views have been 21

1 fairly consistent.

2 You can see that 40 percent of Latino
3 Republicans say that abortion should be legal.
4 About half of Latino Catholic registered voters say 5 it should be legal.

6 This is an area where there is a very

7 substantial difference between Latino registered 8 voters and the foreign-born who are not citizens.

9 60 percent of the foreign born
10 noncitizens said that abortion should be illegal 11 compared to 44 percent of registered voters.

12 On the question of same sex marriage, 13 contrary to abortion, there is no significant 14 difference between the registered voter population 15 and the noncitizen population on this.

16 There are not a lot of differences by 17 religion or in -- you can see that there is some 18 slight differences by denomination and by party, 19 but there are not huge swings the way you saw, for 20 example, on the war, where partisan loyalties were 21 producing very substantial differences.

22 And Latinos are pretty much evenly split

1 on the question of a constitutional amendment.
2 And, again, it is important. This question focused 3 on the policy issue, not the moral question of 4 views of homosexuality as a personal behavior.

5 This really focused on the policy issue 6 that is before now -- that President Bush has 7 endorsed a constitutional amendment that would 8 define marriage as being between a male and a

9 female.

10 And the last line shows the use of the 11 intensity for whom this is a deciding issue or not.

12 At this point, I will turn things over to 13 MollyAnn Brodie.

14 MS. BRODIE: Good morning, everyone.

15 I just want do three things very quickly.

16 I want to take a deeper look at the 17 demographic profile of the Latino electorate, going 18 into some of the generalizations that Roberto made 19 in his opening remarks.

20 I want to examine Latino's attitudes 21 towards politics, politicians, and political 22 parties.

1 And third, just look more closely at 2 other forms of civic and community engagement and 3 involvement, which I think will help in formulating 4 the ongoing discussions that have been happening 5 about political engagement in this country.

6 So first, on chart 20, it shows a point
7 Robert did make when he opened. A much larger 8 share of the Latino electorate was born in the U.S.
9 than the Hispanic population as a whole.

10 So you can see there on the left,

11 two-thirds of the registered Latinos were born in 12 the United States and another 8 percent in Puerto 13 Rico. This is in comparison to about four in ten 14 of all Latinos.

15 And looking at the left-hand side of the 16 chart, you will notice that, like the general 17 population of the United States, most of the 18 registered Latinos are Mexican, 15 percent are 19 Puerto Rican, 6 percent are Cuban.

20 And they primarily live in the south and 21 the west, with California, Texas, Florida, and New 22 York having the largest share of the Latinos.

24

1 Now, before we turn to Chart 22 -- and I
2 know you think this is out of order, and it is -- I
3 just want to skip ahead for a minute. So you guys 4 can stay on Chart 22.

5 I just want to make sure that before we 6 start talking about some other issues with these 7 three groups that Roberto described at the 8 beginning, that we want an accurate picture of the 9 Latino electorate.

10 So you notice here that about 6 in 10 11 Latino adults in the U.S. are citizens. That's 12 that 58 percent.

13 That includes 43 percent who are

14 registered to vote, and 14 percent who are not 15 registered to vote and who say they currently 16 aren't registered. And then there is 42 who are in 17 that not-citizen group.

18 We will talk a lot more about these three 19 groups as we move forward.

20 So, now, if you look at your Chart 22 in 21 your packet, you will see that, while the majority 22 of the Latino electorate primarily speaks English

1 or is bilingual, about 1 in 5 are Spanish dominant.

2 They are also -- the Latino electorate
3 are also much more likely to say that they get 4 their news from English language sources.

5 Although a quarter do say that both 6 Spanish and English is where they get their news, 7 and 17 percent say it's only in Spanish.

8 But look at what a completely opposite 9 picture it is in both of those cases for the 10 noncitizen populations. You can really see the 11 difference between these two populations here.

12 And lastly, on the demographic profile,
13 you know the Latino electorate is better educated 14 than the Latino population as a whole, especially 15 when you compare them to the views of the -- to the 16 experiences of those who are not citizens.

17 I'm just going to skip ahead to Chart 26.

18 As we start talking about what I think is an 19 interesting finding in the survey, and it is 20 Latinos' sort of general ambivalence in their 21 attitudes towards political leaders, political 22 parties, and even among the Latino political unity.

26

1 So, for example, here in Chart 26, you
2 can see that about half of Latinos of these groups 3 that we have been talking about say that political 4 leaders don't care much about what people like them 5 think.

6 In Chart 27, if we focus just on that top 7 part, you will see that the Latino electorate is 8 much more likely to say that the Democratic party 9 has concern for Latinos than it is to say the 10 Republican party.

11 That's the 43 versus the 11 percent.

12 You do see some of this ambivalence again
13 in the fact that 42 percent of registered Latinos 14 say that there is no difference between the 15 parties.

16 Now, this is even greater for those 17 groups that are less politically active than 18 nonregistered citizens and the noncitizens.

19 And lastly on this point, look at the 20 left-hand side of this chart and notice that 21 Latinos are split on whether Latinos from different 22 countries are working together to achieve political

27

1 goals.

2 About half think they are not working 3 together, but the other half think that they are 4 working together.

5 Now, as we move to Chart 30, we will 6 start talking more broadly about the Latino civic 7 and community engagement.

8 In the first notes on the left-hand side, 9 the vast majority of registered Latinos report that 10 they have voted in a U.S. election, but there is 11 still 14 percent of those who that they are 12 registered who say that they have never voted.

13 And then if you look on the right, you 14 will see that even fewer report voting in the 15 elections. And as you all know, reported voting 16 and reported registration is always higher than 17 actual numbers too, because there is a social 18 desirability about telling the person you are 19 talking to that you actually voted and that you are 20 registered to vote.

21 When we ask people why don't they always 22 vote, Latinos are more likely to cite reasons that

28

1 have to do with candidates than reasons that have 2 to do with things of convenience.

3 So, for example, 59 percent agree that 4 they sometimes don't like any of the candidates.
5 56 percent agree they sometimes feel that they 6 don't know enough about the candidate, and these 7 are reasons why they don't always vote.

8 Just 12 percent say it's complicated to 9 register where they live.

10 Now, these candidate factors are even 11 more likely to be cited by the nonregistered
12 Latinos. But notice that about a quarter of them 13 also cite logistic challenges.

14 Now, these are both factors, the 15 candidates and the logistics, that may be important 16 to focus on to get these groups more engaged.

17 Now, a sizable majority -- this is 41
18 percent -- of the Latino electorate -- this charts
19 just the registered voters for right now -- say 20 that having a Latino candidate on the ballot will 21 make a difference in terms of getting them out to 22 vote.

1 So having a Latino on the ballot will 2 help increase voter turnout, at least according to 3 these registered voters.

4 A majority also say that they will be 5 likely to vote for a Latino candidate, that they 6 will be more likely to vote for a Latino candidate
7 than a nonLatino candidate if they say they share 8 the same qualifications, but not if the nonLatino 9 is better qualified.

10 Now, it is interesting on this point -- 11 and you can see on this chart, is when you ask 12 Latinos who are not voters -- so they are citizens, 13 but these are nonvoters and nonregistered 14 citizens -- they are more likely to assume that 15 ethnic appeals play a larger role than what we saw 16 reported in the case of actual registered voters.

17 Now, when we looked at other forms of 18 civic engagement, we found that there are a number 19 of ways registered Latinos say they are actively 20 participating in politics, including attending 21 public meetings and contacting elected officials.

22 In fact, if you look at the bottom of 1 each column, you will see that more than four in 2 ten of registered Latinos report participating in 3 at least one of these five activities.

4 And that compares to about two in ten of 5 the other groups.

6 Registered Latinos, though, don't appear 7 to limit their political activities to those that 8 are specific to Latino concerns.

9 So Latino based appeals seem to be an 10 inference by a minority of activities.

11 So, for example, you can see on the 12 bottom bar, a little more than the quarter of those 13 who say that they have attended a couple of 14 meetings that was specifically related to Latino 15 concerns.

16 Now, instead, when we asked about other 17 type of the volunteer activities, notice that more 18 of all groups told that they participated in these 19 types of things, including six in ten of registered 20 voters and four in ten of the other groups, 21 volunteering their time to their churches, their 22 schools, and their neighborhoods is a much more

1 common activity among Latinos.

2 And here you will see that ethnic-based 3 concerns led more of the nonregistered noncitizen
4 Latinos to engage in these volunteer activities
5 than is reported by registered Latinos.

6 So it seems that specific Latino-based 7 concerns are a more important driver of civic 8 participation for these groups than for those that 9 are already engaged in the electoral system.

10 Now, finally, thinking about the future
11 of Latino's political engagement, note here -- and,
12 as we saw earlier, 14 percent of all Latino adults 13 are citizens that are not yet registered to vote.

14 This 14 percent is going to be an 15 important group for people to focus on.

16 And we already saw, they are less 17 civically engaged in a number of areas than those 18 who are already registered to vote.

19 But here you will see on the left that 20 they are also less likely to report paying 21 attention to politics and government. And on the 22 right, you will see that they are even less likely

32

1 to feel an association with either of the political 2 parties.

3 In fact, more than half of the not

4 registered groups say that they are independent, 5 something else, or that they don't have a party
6 affiliation, suggesting perhaps that they are up 7 for grabs.

8 And finally, notice that despite the 9 lower levels of the civic participation and 10 interest in politics, majorities of both registered 11 Latinos and not registered Latinos feel that 12 individuals can make a difference in the political 13 system.

14 This is certainly not a bad place to 15 start in terms of mobilizing a population into 16 being more politically active.

17 Let's turn it over to Roberto to finish 18 up.

19 MR. SURO: Thank you. As I said before, 20 this question, whether the United States is a 21 country of one culture or many, is pretty much a 22 perennial question.

1 And during periods of immigration, it
2 came into focus somewhat more sharply this spring
3 by the publication of a book by Professor Samuel 4 Huntington, a political scientist at Harvard, that 5 argued very forcefully that this country was

6 founded on a single Anglo-Protestant culture -- 7 that was his phrase -- and that culture and the 8 institutions that flow from it were being 9 endangered by the recent influx of immigrants, and 10 particularly from Mexico.

11 And following publication of that book,
12 we posed several questions related to that idea, 13 which, again, was not original to Professor 14 Huntington and was a matter of debate perennially 15 at great times of immigration.

16 On the question of whether the United 17 States has a single core culture, which can be 18 identified as an Anglo-Protestant culture, this is 19 distinctly a minority view, not just among Latinos, 20 but among all Americans.

21 And you can see there comparison polls 22 that we did separately of this single question of 34

1 the general population.

2 And they are a very strong majority who 3 were almost unanimous in saying that this is a 4 country made up of many cultures rather than single 5 one.

6 It is interesting that almost twice as 7 many Latinos as in the general population say that,

8 in fact, this is a country with a single culture.

9 And I don't know whether that's from the 10 perspective of outside looking in or what, or how 11 do you explain that.

12 In terms of the question of assimilation, 13 there is a paradox that we have found in a number 14 of past polls asking questions, these questions, 15 and others like it, that among the Latinos, you 16 find large majorities who are willing to say that 17 it is important to blend in and to become part of 18 the mainstream and who say it is important to 19 maintain a distinct culture and to preserve 20 Spanish.

21 I said it is a seeming paradox. This is 22 a much longer conversation than for today.

35

1 And we have polled on this subject and 2 produced reports on it rather extensively are the 3 first national survey of Latino -- it's a survey of 4 national -- sorry -- national Latino survey went to 5 the question of assimilation in great detail.

6 But its -- these are not perceived as 7 mutually exclusive by Latinos.

8 There is a perception that this is a 9 country where it is possible to be in the 10 mainstream and maintain a distinct identity both.

13 into the end of July, we are basically in a dead 14 heat, it's really going to depend on, you know, how 15 the electoral college map plays out, what states 16 the election is decided in.

17 And if it is this close, arguably, any 18 constituency of any size could be decisive.

19 So it's very hard to say.

20 QUESTION: Did you ask about the value of 21 education?

22 MS. BRODIE: We actually didn't ask it

37

1 about it in this survey.

2 We did last January, I guess. We did an 3 entire survey on education, and there is a bunch of 4 questions on that. And actually, I think the 5 chartpack from that and the summary from that 6 survey are -- is out on the table, and you should 7 pick that up.

8 And generally there is support for a 9 bilingual education.

10 Basically, there is tremendous support in 11 the Latino population for learning English, 12 especially for adult immigrants to learn English, 13 and of course for children to learn English.

14 It's as high as it is for the general
15 U.S. population.

16 But then when it comes to bilingual
17 debate, there were some differences by assimilation 18 and some of those kind of issues.

19 You know, turning to Rebecca here, we 20 should identify her at this point. Rebecca Levin 21 has worked with the Kaiser Family Foundation, and 22 has been a project manager on all of these Latino

38

1 surveys, and we couldn't have produced any of this 2 stuff without her.

3 So it's a perfect time to acknowledge 4 her.

5 QUESTION: Yes. I have a question on the 6 battleground issue in Florida in particular and the 7 influx of Puerto Ricans and other Latino groups.

8 Florida, obviously is a battleground
9 state, and how influential is the Latino vote going 10 to be in Florida this year?

11 Did you take a look at that?

12 MR. SURO: We don't have -- did not do a 13 sufficient sampling to divide out by country of 14 origin within Florida.

15 But -- we did? I take that back.

16 This is just the percentage. This is not 17 the actual --

18 MS. BRODIE: Percentage of registered.

19 MR. SURO: In terms of the size in 20 Florida, our survey found that 26 percent of 21 registered voters in Florida are Puerto Ricans, 22 which is a population that has been growing

1 fastest, and the one that is perceived as 2 potentially sort of a changing dynamic politically 3 there because it has been traditionally a 4 Democratic constituency and 42 percent Cuba still.

10:14:23 5 In terms of their preferences, on that we 6 don't have a breakdown by country of origin in 7 Florida.

10:14:30 8 Generally, the horse race poll showed 9 that a President Bush is not going as well in 10 Florida or among Cubans as he did in 2000.

11 MS. BRODIE: But it is also true that 12 when we look at the total national data by country 13 of origin, there are big differences between the 14 views of Puerto Ricans and the views of Cubans as, 15 you know, pretty historical, conventional wisdom 16 type differences.

17 And so that may play out in Florida.

18 But as Roberto said, we can't look at it 19 in that level of detail.

20 QUESTION: I'm concerned about the 21 immigration question that you had on your survey.

22 So the question is why does immigration

1 run so low? Is that because they think it is to 2 individuals, but they don't see the connection with 3 the whole system?

4 You know, the system is broken pretty 5 much. Because I think most of us would have 6 consensus to say that it is broken.

7 Now, the second part to that is 8 immigration important to voters versus recent 9 immigrants.

10:15:4110 Is there a difference?

10:15:4211 And the third part of that is then how 12 important would immigration as an issue be for the 13 candidates right now.

14 MR. SURO: You know, as with a lot of 15 surveys, you ask a question. And then when you see 16 the result, you wish you could call 2,000 people 17 back and say, Why did you say that, and this 18 happens all the time.

19 Unfortunately, we are left with the 20 result, and people will apply their interpretations 21 to it as they want us to. Why? It is a pretty 22 clear result.

1 I mean, you are talking about, as I said,
2 between education and immigration, it is a 3 two-to-one difference in terms of ranking of 4 priority.

5 And I was -- the obvious, very simple, 6 first-level analysis is it is just not perceived as 7 an urgent problem, that there is not a perception 8 of a crisis.

9 And as you see in some of the other 10 responses on sort of the size of the flow, very 11 narrowly a majority say that to leave it as it is.
12 And then you have got minorities that they either 13 increase it or decrease it.

14 But there is really no basis for sort of 15 further speculation as to what explains that very 16 interesting number.

17 MS. BRODIE: And then in your packet, one 18 of the things you have is a complete top line which 19 shows every question we ask and the result for the 20 total Latino population, registered Latinos, not 21 registered, and not citizens.

22 And in that document, you can see that

1 those who are not citizens, or the more recent 2 immigrants, are no more likely to say that 3 immigration would be extremely important to their 4 vote than the other groups.

5 So, you know, what Roberto is saying it
6 is a personal issue, and I see this a lot.

7 We do mostly health care related things.
8 And there is a lot of issues in health care that 9 people see as personal issues, but not as national 10 issues.

11 And then I think you might be getting 12 some of that here too.

13 QUESTION: I was very curious about that 14 question because I think that, on the immigration 15 side, these findings are consistent in the sense 16 that there has been some holes where immigration -- 17 or it ranks near the bottom.

18 What I notice is the way the question is 19 asked. So, in this one in particular is would it 20 make you vote no or so and so as opposed to whether 21 it is an important issue.

22 And I think that is an important

1 qualification, particularly because, I mean, when

2 you say that Latinos didn't vote for that because 3 they don't think it's broken, I wonder to what 4 extent that is an interpretation as opposed to what 5 people actually said because immigration sometimes 6 ranks latter in terms of priority.

7 Because for a lot of people, particularly 8 they are more citizen and more detached to the 9 immigrant experience, it's more of a litmus test 10 for the candidate than in their respect for the 11 candidate for the community rather than a pressing 12 problem that needs to be immediately solved in 13 their daily life.

14 So I was wondering how you arrived the 15 conclusion that people don't think the system is 16 broken or the issue.

17 MR. SURO: You know, as I said, it is 18 just a very first-level sort of analysis, and it is 19 just from supposition that if it ranks so low in 20 terms of an issue that would be determinative of a 21 vote, that I, you know, there would be -- there was 22 a deduction on my part that that suggests that

1 there is no sense of crisis about it.

2 So you can see clearly on other issues 3 where other polling suggests there is a sense of 4 crisis and where you have got clearly health care,

5 it affects a great -- you know, an absence of 6 insurance coverage affects a great many Latinos who 7 have got a very strong mind that this is an 8 important issue as well.

10:19:51 9 It was purely a deduction.

10 MS. BRODIE: And I'll just say too, your 11 point about the question wording and the way you 12 ask the question really doesn't matter.

10:20:0113 I mean, we ask them questions all the 14 time about the most important problems for 15 government to address. You will you get a 16 different list of the most important problem facing 17 the nation. You will get a different list of the 18 most urgent problem.

10:20:1419 We do the most urgent health problem. We 20 get a different list.

10:20:1621 So there is some -- again, you know, it's 22 an election season, and now it is time to be asking

45

1 about voting. And if it is not coming up as 2 extremely important to the people's vote, then 3 that's, you know -- you have to take them at their 4 word.

5 QUESTION: Right. I agree. It is just 6 (inaudible) ask only, without (inaudible)

7 candidate --

8 MS. BRODIE: (Simultaneously) Yeah.

9 QUESTION: (Inaudible).

10 MS. BRODIE: Of course it's important.

11 QUESTION: Do you believe a strong
12 campaign working for registering the younger 13 population would a significant impact upon the 14 Latino vote?

15 MR. SURO: Yeah. I mean, it is a very 16 sizable source of growth. The numbers really quite 17 impressive.

18 It is -- every year since 2000 on 19 average, about 425,000 native born Latinos are 20 turning 18. That's a lot of voters around the 21 country.

22 And they are no different than other

46

1 native born Americans in the same age group in 2 terms of being very difficult to mobilize.

3 MS. BRODIE: And I think that's a really 4 important point.

5 Because if you look at the voter trend 6 over time in predictive models of what is going to 7 happen to voter trends -- and this is for the whole 8 electorate, not just the Latino electorate -- an 9 18-year-old today is much less likely to show up at 10 the polls than an 18-year-old was, say, 20 years 11 ago.

12 So even though it has always been the 13 case that young people are less likely to be 14 engaged in politics than older people and through 15 your life cycle you are more likely to register and 16 start voting, the curves have shifted down.

17 So it is actually -- I think young people 18 should be a great concern to anybody who is 19 interested in our electoral system because, as a 20 group, they are much less likely show up than they 21 used to be.

22 MR. SURO: I mean, there is another

47

1 interesting wrinkle that distinguishes these young 2 voters from others, in that a very large share of 3 them are the children of immigrants.

4 And often, as they are often the first in 5 their families to finish high school and the first 6 in their families to go to college, the first in 7 their families to get a white collar job. They are 8 also the first in their families to vote in a U.S.
9 election.

10 And they are not coming out of households 11 where there is sort of a tradition of partisan

12 education of one party or another. They are not 13 likely to learn from their parents saying they are 14 a Democrat or a Republican, or they talk about one 15 candidate or another.

16 And so presumably, (inaudible) because 17 they don't -- because they are sort of the first, 18 you know, of their family to be voting in the 19 United States.

20 QUESTION: Good morning.

21 I'm interested in the poll on 22 discrimination. You say that Latino Democrats are

48

1 more likely to feel that discrimination is a major
2 problem compared to the Republican democrats (sic).

3 I was wondering what the differences are,
4 for example. Is it because of where they live or 5 any kind of economic difference?

6 And I'm also kind of curious about the 7 concept of discrimination.

8 Is it a specific dimension of 9 discrimination, for example, racial, ethnic, 10 housing, access to health care, police enforcement?
11 So sort of the holding out a little bit of the 12 concept of the discrimination.

13 MR. SURO: That is a very interesting

14 question.

15 And I confess, it was enough of a race to 16 finish to present a first-level analysis of the 17 data.

18 There is enough of a data set here to do 19 the kind of regression analysis that would be 20 necessary to determine whether it is an income, 21 education, region, country of origin, or one of the 22 other variables that would be most determinative of

49

1 somebody's likelihood to say that they were -- they 2 cite (inaudible) or that they or their family 3 members had been victims.

4 We asked questions in a past survey,
5 2002, and, again, that report is out on the table, 6 that did differentiate forms of immigration and on 7 different subjects.

8 We didn't in this survey.

9 QUESTION: Looking at the survey 10 findings, particularly at civic participation and 11 volunteering, where do you gauge Latinos stand 12 compared to other ethnic groups and mainstream 13 society?

14 MS. BRODIE: That's a great question.

15 And there are -- there is enough data out

16 there that we could do a more scientific analysis.
17 But my impression, looking at it, is that it is 18 fairly similar that you see, you know, people who 19 are engaged in politics at one level are more 20 likely to do some of those other activities.

21 People who are disengaged from voting are 22 also disengaged from all sorts of other civic

50

1 activities. So that to me is very consistent.

2 In terms of the exact levels, we need to 3 look at population -- general population surveys 4 and do some comparisons, which we haven't done yet.

5 But we could and should.

6 QUESTION: I had a question about the 7 fact that the electorate had increased only 20 8 percent from the year 2000, and the largest 9 increase has been in the native-born Latino 10 population, which is, as you said, the young 11 demographic.

12 I'm curious if there are any issues
13 particularly important for young Latinos as opposed 14 to older Latinos?

15 MR. SURO: Yeah. It is important to 16 remember these refer to electorate rather than the 17 population as a whole.

18 Obviously immigration is a much bigger

19 contributor to the overall growth of the population 20 than it is to the electorate.

21 On this fact sheet, there are some -- a 22 couple of issues that are pulled out where younger

51

1 Latino voters are different than older ones.

2 For example, on the question of the 3 Constitutional amendment on same sex marriage, that 4 is the only age group, the 18 to 24-year-old age 5 group, in which a majority is opposed to the 6 amendment, 55 percent saying they are opposed 7 compared to 39 percent of voters over 55.

8 And also, younger Latino voters tend to 9 be more skeptical of administration's conduct of 10 the war.

11 On that series of questions we asked, the 12 negative responses are somewhat higher among 13 younger voters than they of older voters.

14 QUESTION: I have a question about the 15 Cuban-American vote and Chart 22 saying that they 16 are 52 percent Republican, and historically they 17 have been Republican.

18 I wanted to compare that to Chart 7 where 19 you talk about the top issues for Latino voters.

20 And I'm wondering if there is a

21 difference in the overall Latino electorate versus 22 the Cubans say are their most important issues to

52

1 try determine kind of what the issues are that are 2 turning Cubans more to the Republican party rather 3 than the Democratic party.

4 MS. BRODIE: There is a lot of data in 5 that survey.

6 I know we had that. My recollection is 7 they didn't have that difference, that many 8 differences on the priorities of the questions -- 9 I'm sorry -- the priorities that are affecting 10 their vote. My recollection is that it wasn't that 11 different.

12 But, let me see if I have it here. And 13 if not -- let me take a look at it while somebody 14 else asks a question, and I will let you know.

15 QUESTION: Just a general question.

16 As you said, surveys tend to, by the 17 nature of questions, slant the answers in one 18 direction or another.

19 But also the timing of this survey, do 20 you consider to be a definitive survey from your 21 perspective, given that this is the peak time for 22 the opposition candidate, in the case, Kerry would

1 be just entering the convention?

2 Would you do a follow up survey, let's
3 say, in September, October, to see how this survey 4 matches against the rest of the nation?

5 MR. SURO: I mean, speaking of the horse
6 race survey, as with any horse race survey, you 7 know, it is only as good until sort of the next 8 event that changes things or until the next horse 9 race survey comes out.

10 I mean, it's -- I think we have got a 11 fairly good read on where Latino voters are at this 12 moment going into the convention period of the 13 campaign.

14 And the larger survey is a very different 15 matter.

16 I would argue that the larger survey is 17 fairly -- it is definitive in terms of how the 18 Latino population voters and nonvoters think about 19 an entire range of issues in the early part of 20 2004.

21 And it is by far the larger sample and 22 most detailed questionnaire looking at the state of

1 Latino political thinking and Latino participation 2 that has certainly been done in this election, and 3 probably for several years.

4 I'm not sure if there has ever been one 5 that is quite as extensive as this.

6 It is a very important benchmark for sure 7 of the larger survey.

8 And as to whether we will do another 9 horse race poll or not, that's not our primary 10 activity. There is a lot of other people who do 11 horse race polls.

12 We basically produced the horse race poll
13 because we had done a larger survey.

14 And it seemed logical to try to answer 15 the question, as we were releasing the larger 16 survey. Okay, where does the presidential race 17 stand right now.

18 But it may become tempting later on.

19 MS. BRODIE: To get back to the Cuban 20 question. It looks in general that Cubans have 21 sort of the same level of concern about the issues 22 as the other groups.

55

1 Although they are a little bit less
2 likely to say education will be extremely important

3 to their vote, economy would be extremely 4 important, and the war in Iraq.

5 So it's not that their rankings are any 6 different. It is just that all of the issues are a 7 little bit less likely to say it would be extremely 8 important to their vote.

9 QUESTION: My question regards your 10 survey's reporting on party affiliation for 11 registered Latino voters, and it says that 20 12 percent consider them independent, and 7 percent 13 are something else.

14 I was wondering, first of all, would 15 independent mean that they are independent thinkers 16 or that they are actually registered independents?

17 And my second question what does or 18 something else mean within that 7 percent?

19 MR. SURO: Independent means that they 20 answered independent.

21 And something else means that they came 22 up with, you know, something other than democrat,

56

1 republican, independent, or don't know, that they 2 could have been green, it could have been, you 3 know, some other party affiliation or some sort of 4 other answer that wasn't easily coded as either

5 Democratic or Republican.

6 MS. BRODIE: As with all survey research, 7 there is lots of different ways to ask very similar 8 questions. And one of the standard ways is the way
9 we do it, which is do you consider yourself
10 Republican, Democratic, Independent, or something 11 else.

12 And then, after they answer that, for the 13 people who say independent, something else, or 14 don't know, we say, Do you consider yourself closer 15 to the Democratic or Republican party.

16 So those leaned party numbers for 17 registered voters are 55 percent Democrat, 28
18 percent Republican, 8 percent independent, three 19 something else, and 5 percent don't know.

20 And those are all in your top line 2.

21 But, again, the question was, Do you
22 consider yourself an independent. So, as Roberto

57

1 said, it is how they self-identify. It is a 2 self-identification question.

3 QUESTION: Did you ask about affirmative
4 action, and this is particular for Latinos?

5 MR. SURO: Yeah. Not on this survey.

10:33:02 6 We did it in the education survey, which 7 is out there.

8 MS. BRODIE: You wanted to come in 9 January.

10 QUESTION: I was wondering if you broke 11 it down by gender at all, if Latinos were any more 12 likely or less likely than Hispanic men to register 13 to vote, if they showed any significant difference 14 of opinion on certain issues.

15 Is that something that you were going to 16 record?

17 MS. BRODIE: We certainly have all of 18 that.

19 We haven't looked at it completely in 20 depth.

21 I don't remember anything jumping out as 22 being really, really different because usually if

58

1 something jumped out as really, really different,
2 we would have put it in the press release.

3 But we certainly will look more closely.
4 We can get all of the numbers for you. Just come 5 up to Rebecca or I afterwards, and we can do that.

6 QUESTION: I was just wondering on terms 7 of the multiethnic question, were there any 8 follow-up questions in terms of the Latinos saw as 9 positive or negative aspects for multicultural

10 society or a single cultural society?

11 MR. SURO: No. What you see is pretty 12 much what we did this time.

13 And I hate to keep referring people to 14 past surveys, but -- anyway.

15 Part of the idea of this project has been 16 sort of developed, you know, a wide array of 17 information, and the 2002 survey does have much 18 more depth on perceptions of U.S. society and on 19 those issues and the question about behavior or how 20 you are supposed act in terms of dealing with 21 multiethnic racial differences.

22 QUESTION: And my question is about

59

1 hypergrowth areas.

2 If I'm not mistaken, in 2003, the Pew
3 Center published information about locations in the 4 United States that in the last 20 years, peer 5 growth has doubled nationally in the Latino
6 populations.

7 And I'm curious about if there were any 8 differences in trends or morays that you noticed in 9 this area in those hypergrowth areas as opposed to 10 areas where growth might have slowed like in 11 California or in Texas.

12 MR. SURO: We have not done that kind of 13 analysis. It is something we could try to do.

14 I mean, generally, what we do know is 15 that a lot of movement in the hypergrowth areas has 16 been was immigrants and with much lower rates of 17 citizenship and registered voting.

18 So you wouldn't -- it would be much
19 harder to do that analysis in terms of -- aspects 20 of this polling really relate to electoral 21 behavior. Because a lot of those areas, as you 22 said, are being populated by fairly recent 60

1 immigrants.

2 But it's a question if we will pursue it.

3 Are we done? I think that's it.

4 Well, thank you all for very much.

6 above-captioned matter were concluded at 10:33
