Survey of Americans on Values.....	2
Follow-up Survey of Americans on Values.....	19

This Washington Post/Harvard University/Kaiser Family Foundation study is based on random telephone interviews with 2,025 adults conducted between July 29 and August 18, 1998. Surveying was done by Chilton Research. The margin of error is plus or minus 2 percentage points but is larger for split samples and certain subgroups.

The State of our Values

1. Do you think things in this country are generally going in the right direction or do you feel things have gotten pretty seriously off on the wrong track?

The Washington Post/Kaiser Family Foundation/Harvard University Survey Project 1995-1998

The Washington Post/Kaiser Family Foundation/Harvard University Survey Project is a three-way partnership and an experiment in combining survey research and reporting to better inform the public. The Post, Kaiser, and Harvard jointly design and analyze surveys examining public knowledge, perceptions, and misperceptions on major issues. The Post then reports the results as well as facts to dispel myths and misperceptions. Our hope is that this project contributes to a better understanding of public knowledge on major issues facing the country as well as more effective efforts by the media to educate, inform, and engage citizens in national debates.

The first report released by the Kaiser Family Foundation, The Four Americas: Government and Social Policy Through the Eye's of America's Multi-racial and Multi-ethnic Society, expands on The Washington Post's coverage of the first survey which focused on the perspectives of different racial and ethnic groups with regard to social policy and the role of government in America. The findings show the different perceptions that America's racial and ethnic groups have of the social and economic standing of the other groups. It also shows how white Americans' misperceptions regarding the social and economic realities facing African Americans relate directly to their views and opinions on public policies and aid to minorities.

The second survey, released by The Washington Post on Sunday, January 28, 1996, examines public understanding, perceptions and attitudes about the role of government. It sheds light on why Americans are so distrustful and cynical about the federal government and its ability to act effectively. In addition, a closer look at trust of other institutions as well as fellow Americans is undertaken.

The third survey, released by The Washington Post on Sunday, October 13, 1996, examines public understanding, assessments and attitudes about the economy and economic policy. In conjunction with the survey of Americans, a companion survey of 250 economists was also completed. The companion survey shows the differences in perceptions and attitudes of economists compared to the general public.

The fourth survey undertaking, presented by The Washington Post in a five part series, beginning Sunday, March 22, 1998, examines Americans' opinions, perceptions and attitudes regarding gender and interactions between the sexes. A series of five related surveys paint an up-to-date picture of gender issues in work place and on the home front, including sexual harassment, the division of household tasks, parenting roles, and the joys and challenges of marriage today.

This fifth set of surveys examines social and moral values and their role in Americans' outlook on politics and policy. A portion of the findings from these surveys appeared in the Washington Post on September 11, 1998, commencing a series of occasional articles to be released over a period of eight weeks. The goal of the surveys—and their presentation in a series of reflections on values in the public domain—is to shed light on the influence of values on discourse about social and health policy, party politics, and broader questions about the future of our nation.

Additional copies of the national topline and Post article reprints from the values surveys, as well as the other surveys in the series, can be obtained by calling the Kaiser Family Foundation publications request line at 1-800-656-4KFF (race: #1105; government: #1110; economy: #1199; gender: #1383; values:#1441).
